From the President

Zecher L'Tziat Mitzrayim

Not being a rabbi, nor being nearly as knowledgeable in Torah or Jewish tradition as many other members of our congregation, I have steered clear of addressing religious topics in this column. Nevertheless, with Pesach staring us in the face, it seems fitting to say a few words about the holiday.

Pesach, along with Shabbat, is special in that these two holidays are primarily celebrated in the home rather than in the synagogue. In the case of Pesach particularly, this allows for a proliferation of traditions. Along with that comes a proliferation of Haggadot. The Haggadah collection at the National Library of Israel has on the order of 15,000 different Haggadot from many countries and ages. Your Haggadah is probably not the same as my Haggadah, and your seder is probably not the same as my seder, which may be why Pesach is the favorite holiday for both of us.

What else makes Pesach so popular? For one, it is designed to teach our children. Right near the beginning of the seder a part is set aside especially for the kids—the Ma Nishtanah. The rest of the seder could be a long, boring lesson, but good teachers know that a long lesson must be broken up by a variety of activities. The seder does just that. We wash our hands; we dip greens in salt water; we go looking for a hidden matzoh; we open the door for Elijah; we sing songs; we make a sandwich. In some traditions we even flail each other with green onions.

In my house we have taken it a step farther. We have theme seders, with assignments given out before the event. We've had seder plays and seder puppet shows. We've illustrated pages of the Haggadah and adorned ourselves with seder hats. One year we challenged each participant to learn and lead a seder song, and in another we asked them to do their parts as rap hip hop chants. There was the year we asked each person to tell a Pesach joke, and another time we asked them to talk about a number that appears in the Haggadah. This year, since you asked, we will play a seder quiz game called Kahoot. (Never heard of it? Google it.)

But, as is said about Shabbat, it isn't just that the Jews keep Pesach; Pesach has kept the Jewish people. I have a theory about why that is. People who suffer through difficult situations together share a common bond for the rest of their lives. The Jewish people suffered together through slavery in Egypt, and our tradition makes sure that we never forget that. References to the escape from bondage are sprinkled throughout our liturgy. The kiddush says that Shabbat is a reminder of our exodus from Egypt: "Zecher L'tziat Mitzrayim." The V'ahavtah ends with the Lord reminding us that it was He who brought us out of the land of Egypt "asher hotzeiti etchem mai-Eretz Mitzrayim." And the Haggadah, of course, is all about the exodus from Egypt, warning the aloof, uninterested son that if he had been there, he would not have been set free.

Enjoy the Feast of Freedom!
